MEANWHILE, IN A BUSY PUBLISHING OFFICE IN THE HEART OF NEW YORK...

ZELDA

MIXED-UP HEIR

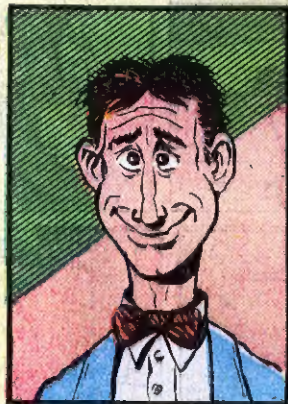

OH, the bad things that can come into the minds of bad people! And I used to think the folks who lived in my house were such nice characters too. I guess they wouldn't have thought up all that nasty trouble for me if I hadn't inherited all that money. Yeah, that's the cause of those bad things all right. Have I got you confused? Good. At least I'm not the only crazy, mixed-up lunatic around here. Of course I'm not really crazy, but those bad folks did all they could to make the authorities think I am off my rocker . . . just so they could get their hands on my dough.

You see, these characters in my house are my cousins . . . and if I should kick the bucket, they'd inherit my money. Now there's a silly phrase, "Kick the bucket!"

But I'm telling you this story to prove to you that I ain't mad, so we'll leave this matter of silly, nonsensical phrases folks use in everyday speech for some other time. So pay attention to my tale of woe and lend me your ears. Oops! There I go now! Lend me your ears. Now it's perfectly obvious that you, dear reader, are not going to detach your ears and lend them to me. Wonder why Mark Antony used that silly phrase when he asked his friends, Romans, countrymen to listen to him? Lend me your ears! Tsk tsk! Well, I'll be sure not to use that phrase again!

So on with my story. You understand about the money, don't you? I inherited it from a rich old uncle, who considered me his favorite nephew. He really didn't care for my cousins at all. So I got all his dough when the old boy kicked the bucket. Grrr! There I go again. If I'm not careful, you'll start thinking I'm really crazy and then you'll be on the side of my bad cousins. But honestly, I ain't mad, and before this story is ended I hope you'll believe me.

About this madness business: my cousins couldn't wait for me to die. If they could prove that I am mentally unbalanced, they could have me put away in an institution . . . you know, a place up in the hills with barred windows, padded cells, and those unique jackets with straps. With me put away, they could say that I'm incompetent to handle all that money in a wise, sane, sensible manner, and they would get legal control of the big green bundle. Get the picture? So right away, my bad cousins began their devilish plot to prove my mind was unbalanced!

Well, now . . . how did my bad cousins go about proving me mad? Read on! We all lived in the same house, so those characters were around me all the time. I first had a suspicion that something was wrong when my cousin Jake looked out the window and smilingly remarked what a warm, pleasant day it was, with the sun shining down. What's suspicious about that? Why, man, it was raining cats and dogs! Oh no, not really cats and dogs, you understand, but it was really raining to beat the band. Oh no, nobody was out there in the street beating the band, whatever that means, but I want to tell you, chum, it was pouring! And the weather was so cold outside, that the cold air was freezing those raindrops and turning them into hailstones! So wouldn't you get suspicious if someone remarked to you under the same conditions that it was a warm, sunshiny day? But of course!

I laughed at Jake when he said that and pointed out to him that his eyes must be playing tricks on him, because the weather was nothing like he was describing it at all. And that's when it all started! My other cousins happened to be in the room at the same time, and when I clearly described the stormy weather that was raging outdoors, they all turned to me and gasped and stared at me with that "oh isn't it pitiful" type of look. Then they all started to chatter at once and assured me that Jake had given an accurate description of the weather. Hmm, so they were trying to insinuate that I was off my rocker, eh? Well, I wasn't going to play along with that. I left the room without giving them the satisfaction of arguing about the weather with them!

DEBBIE REYNOLDS

Well, that was only the beginning, chum! For days, they continued their campaign to convince me I was unbalanced. Of course, once they had me believing it, it would be a simple matter to convince the mental doctors. The following day after the weather report incident, I slept a little late, but not late enough to miss breakfast and wait around for lunch. I bounced down the stairs, feeling gay and alert and walked into the kitchen. My cousin Effie was washing the dishes.

"How about fixing up a nice breakfast for me, Effie?" I asked. "I'm as hungry as a bear!"

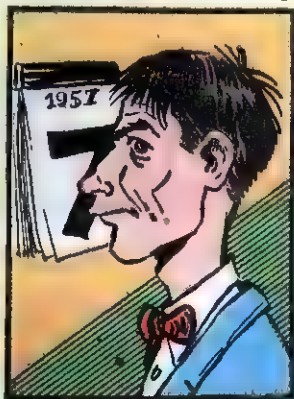

Now you'd think that Effie would tell me to sit down while she got a hot breakfast ready for me, wouldn't you? Oh no, not Effie! She only stood there with her bare face hanging out, staring at me.

"Why, you just finished eating a huge breakfast twenty minutes ago!" Effie said.

Now I ask you. If I had eaten a hearty breakfast only twenty minutes before, would I be likely to forget it? Twenty minutes ago I was still upstairs in my bedroom crawling out of bed. And I was hungry as a bear! Could a guy be that hungry if he had eaten only twenty minutes before? I laughed at Effie and told her she must've been dreaming. She got peeved at that and led the way into the living room, where my other cousins were sitting around. Effie asked each and every one of them in turn whether or not I had been at the breakfast table with them a short time before. Of course they all insisted I had eaten my breakfast with them. Naturally. What else would they say? They were trying to prove I was nuts, weren't they? Sure!

Well, that went on for weeks. The fantastic things those bad cousins of mine claimed happened, when I had absolutely no remembrance of such things happening at all. For example, there was the time I wanted to check on the date before I wrote it off top of the letter I was writing.

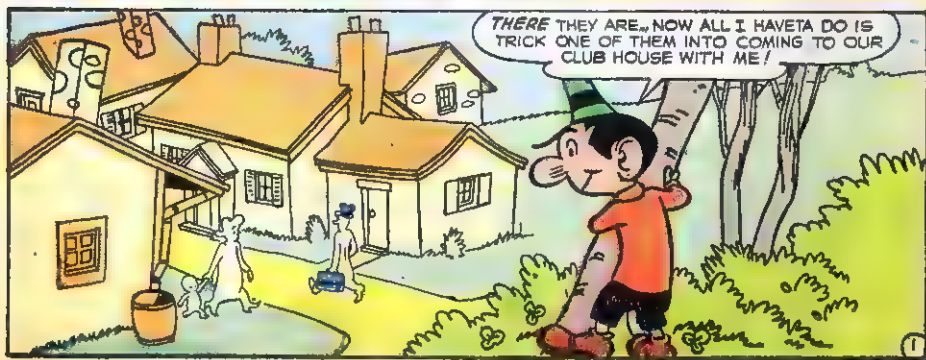

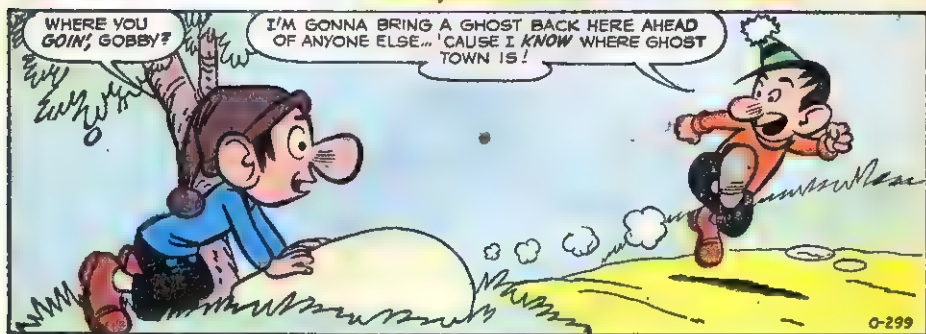

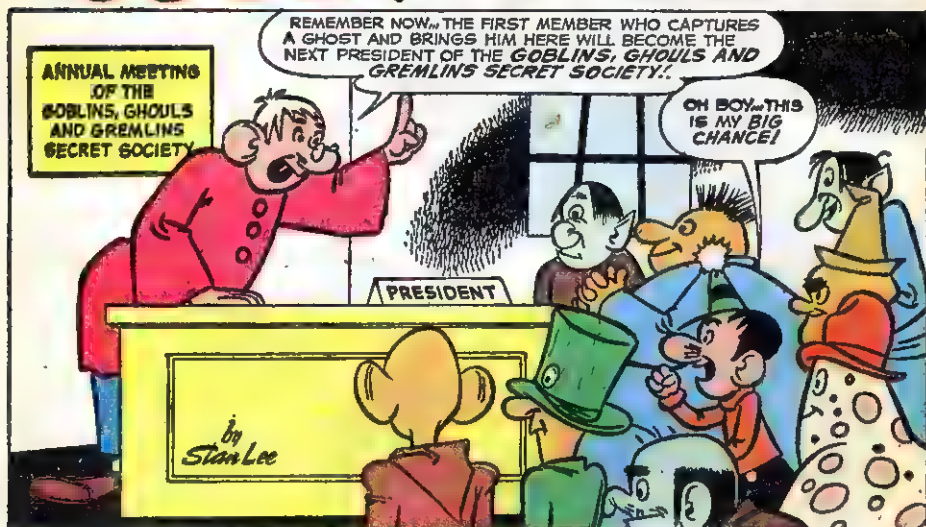

We had only one calendar in the house . . . it was in the kitchen. Of course I knew it was the year 1987, but I wanted to check on the day. So what happens? I go into the kitchen and glance at the calendar. Yep, those bad cousins of mine had switched it, and the calendar that was hanging there was an ancient one they must've dug out of some museum. It was dated 1957, in the month of March. Now I ask you! I knew it was December in the year 1987! Oh, they were sly ones all right.

Then there was the time I decided to take a vacation, just to get away from my cousins for a while. I told them of my plans, mentioning the fact that I would first buy a new space ship and go on a cruise to Mars and Jupiter, perhaps finding time for a quick jaunt to the Moon, and then return to Earth. Well, you should have seen the expressions on their faces when I said that! Now I ask you . . . what's so unusual about a trip to the planets in a new space ship?

Well, in order not to bore you with the evil plot of my bad cousins any longer, let me tell you how it came out. They brought in a couple of mental doctors who examined me carefully, asking all sorts of questions which I answered in my usual bright, alert and brilliant manner. No bad cousins were going to put anything over on this boy! But you know what happened? Those mental doctors must've been in on the deal too, probably baited with a promise of a cut of my money . . . because they signed some papers and then some other people came to the house with one of those unique jackets with the straps and wrapped me up in it. Know where they took me? To that place up in the hills, with the barred windows and the padded cells. That's where I'm writing this story from. If I could only convince someone that I ain't mad! Because I've really got my heart set on that trip, and I'm only wasting my time hanging around this place. What trip? You know, the one to Mars and Jupiter and the Moon. In fact, I might even take an extra week and stop over on the Big Dipper. Sure, why not? I'm just crazy about swimming!
